Jason Wu

Last night, Jason Wu, one of the new stars in the New York fashion world, presented his latest winter collection. Diane Miller introduces the newcomer.

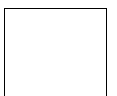

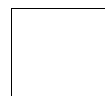

The Taiwan-born, Manhattan raised 26-year-old presented his first catwalk collection in 2006 and quickly became a favorite of downtown starlets who admired his brand of simple eloquence. From full-length gowns to more casual day wear, Wu's designs combine pure classic lines and bright colors. The result is modern, wearable but at the same time extraordinary.

In 2008 Wu won the Rising Star Award for women's ready-to-wear. He was much loved in the fashion world but otherwise not well-known.

He rarely shot to fame when Michelle Obama wore one of his gowns at the official Inauguration Dinner.

"Like the rest of the world, I had no idea what the new first lady would wear on that special occasion. I had ordered a pizza and I was sitting in my apartment together with friends to watch the festivities. Then the president's wife came out and she was on the scene and it was my design and I just stopped everything. I remember saying, 'that's mine'. It was unbelievable."

Minutes later, his cell phone started ringing and the internet was flooded with searches for Jason Wu. Overnight, the 26-year-old became one of the hottest names in fashion.
